Increase in reports of on-campus crimes

Kelly Iverson
staff writer

According to K-State's annual security and fire report, there was a dramatic increase in crime occurrences across several categories from 2009 to 2011. Some of these categories include liquor law arrests, drug law violations and forcible sex offenses.

Jennifer Jirovec, junior in journalism and mass communications, had a run in with crime in the beginning of August when she had just moved into her house located only a couple blocks from Aggieville.

"I was still not comfortable in this brand new house," Jirovec said.

One night, her two roommates were asleep upstairs and Jirovec was asleep in the basement. Jirovec was asleep until about 5:30 a.m. when she heard a crashing noise.

"I immediately sat up, scared by the unexpected bang that woke me up," Jirovec said. "I considered getting up and checking to see what it was, but instead I went back to sleep because I had to be up in a few hours."

Jirovec said that the banging was persistent and she continued to ignore it and tried to sleep. She could not try to sleep anymore when the knocking was at her own bedroom door. She said her door had been locked but the stranger kicked it open. An unknown man walked into her room.

"He asks, 'Who is your father?' and 'Why are you in my bed?' I'm panicking and asking him to please leave my room," Jirovec

CIA Director Petraeus steps down

David Petraeus resigned his position as director of the CIA last week when an FBI investigation revealed that he was engaging in an extramarital affair. Petraeus, formerly the commanding general of the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, was appointed to the position in April of 2011.

During his tenure, the CIA was implicated in a scandal when agents stationed in Cartagena, Colombia, securing the area for President Barack Obama's arrival were found to have brought prostitutes back to their hotel rooms.

The FBI discovered the affair, between Petraeus and his biographer Paula Broadwell, while following up on complaints of "harassing" emails sent from Broadwell's account. Agents came across messages between Broadwell and Petraeus that revealed the affair.

In a statement, President Obama named Michael Morell the acting director of the CIA, but did not elaborate on when a permanent replacement would be named or who that might be.

Earthquake strikes Burma

A magnitude 6.8 earthquake rattled northern Myanmar on Sunday, killing as many as 12 and destroying a major bridge, a gold mine and a number of Buddhist temples.

Official information from Myanmar was slow due to an inefficient natural disaster response system, according to the Washington Post, despite the fact that the country suffered 140,000 deaths in a cyclone in 2008. The United States Geological Survey also reported a magnitude 5.8 aftershock in the area later in the day on Sunday, but no additional damage was reported as a result.

For the past couple of weeks, there has been a growing concern among K-State fans that the Wildcats could finish the season undefeated, and still get jumped by the Oregon Ducks to be neglected from the national championship.

However, Johnny Manziel and the Texas A&M Aggies significantly helped the Wildcats by knocking out the Crimson Tide 29-24 in Tuscaloosa, Ala., on Saturday night.

With the Alabama loss the Crimson Tide dropped from the No. 1 ranking, allowing K-State to ascend to the top spot in the BCS rankings for the first time in school history.

Riding an impressive defensive performance, the K-State Wildcats moved to 10-0 on the year with a 23-10 victory over the Texas Christian University Horned Frogs on Saturday night in Fort Worth, Texas. With the victory came a No. 1 ranking in the BCS poll, K-State's first hold on the top spot in school history.

"It certainly wasn't a complete effort," said head coach Bill Snyder, who acknowledged that, like any game, the victory had left him with plenty to "nitpick" about. "We didn't play a complete ball game, we left some things on the field."

After leaving in the third quarter of last Saturday's home win over Oklahoma State with an undisclosed injury, the big question

Veteran's Day Parade honors those who have served in military

Shelby Daniels
staff writer

The annual Veteran's Day Parade took place along Poyntz Avenue Friday morning as students, teachers, firefighters, veterans and local politicians of Manhattan marched down the street, crowded with applauding Manhattan residents on both sides.

The day started off at 7 a.m. at the Manhattan VFW for the Veteran's Day Breakfast. At 9 there was a state and territorial flag display followed by a pictures, memorabilia and poster display. The parade began at 9:30, starting at Manhattan Town Center and ending at City Hall. As the parade came to an end there was a performance by the Fort Riley Spouses Choir.

After the parade, the crowd gathered into the City Hall auditorium for the commemorative program. Mayor Loren Pepperd was one of the speakers at the ceremony, which he found to be a great honor.

"Veterans means my family history," Pepperd said.

A Vietnam War veteran himself, Pepperd said his grandparents taught him what it meant to be a veteran.

"Veteran's Day is not only to honor our veterans that have passed away or fought in other wars, but Veteran's Day is also for our veterans that are alive

Volleyball team gets back on track with sweep over TCU Horned Frogs

sports editor

Just like the football team, the K-State (21-5, 8-5 Big 12 Conference) volleyball team took care of the TCU Horned Frogs (14-11, 3-9 Big 12), winning three sets on Saturday at Ahearn Field House.

After falling in the final three sets to KU last Wednesday because of extra points, the Wildcats were able to win the final set against TCU 26-24. Junior middle blocker Kaitlynn Pelger, who led the team with 15 kills, talked about the team's added emphasis on getting those points at the end of sets.

"We actually did a drill this week that pertained to a 24-24 set, and I think that helped us out," Pelger said. "We were super excited about it because that is what we were working on. I mean, we do not want it that close, but it went our way and was really nice. I think going into that third set, our energy was kind of down, and we picked up our energy. Once we get into those crunch time situations, we click and our chemistry works really well."

While the third set against the Horned Frogs was close, the Wildcats were dominant in the first two sets, winning by eight and nine respectively. Following this season's trend, the Wildcats used a balanced offensive attack to make things tough on the Horned Frogs' defense.

The player responsible for setting up all of the skilled offensive players is senior setter Caitlyn Donahue.

Donahue finished with 40 assists on the game, helping the Wildcats' very solid offensive game, with K-State finishing the match with a hitting percentage of .315.

The Wildcats have a big game coming up on Wednesday at No. 20 Iowa State, and in their last meeting K-State swept in all three sets. Since then, the Cyclones have been playing some very strong volleyball and have won six straight to move ahead of K-State in the Big 12 standings.

First serve is scheduled for 5 p.m. in Ames, Iowa.

K-State women's basketball team defeats Arkansas

Corbin McGuire
staff writer

The K-State women's basketball team turned defense into offense in its 89-55 win over the University of Arkansas-Pine Bluff Sunday afternoon in Bramlage Coliseum.

The Wildcats turned 23 of the Golden Lions' turnovers into 29 points while only committing eight turnovers of their own.

"The offense will come, and the more I see us playing great, accountable defense day in and day out, the more time I'll be able to spend with our team on offense," said head coach Deb Patterson after the game. "Our defense cannot waiver; neither can our rebounding night in and night out."

The Wildcats began to hit on all cylinders after the Golden Lions pulled ahead by two points half-way through the first half, and closed the first half on a 23-4 run to take a 47-26 halftime lead.

Seven Wildcats hit at least one 3-point basket and 10 recorded points against the Golden Eagles for a combined 14-of-35 from beyond the arc for the game.

"We might have one player right now that is probably not a threat from the 3-point line on a consistent level," Patterson said. "We won't necessarily live off that shot but we're very, very good at it."

Brittany Chambers struggled shooting, hitting 5-of-14 from the field, but still led the Wildcats in scoring with 15 points.

"I think I was a little hesitant tonight in some of the shots that I took," Chambers said. "The system will come along. We'll get more used to it. We'll recognize when we're supposed to take the right shots. It'll be more comfortable and there will be less second guessing."

Ashia Woods scored an efficient 10 points on 4-of-5 from the field.

Three other Wildcats scored in double figures to give the Wildcats a balanced attack; Bri Craig, Ashlynn Knoll and Haley Texada finished with 13, 10 and 10 points, respectively.

"It's really up tempo. It works well really with my type of play," Texada said about how she is fitting in with the offense.

The Golden Lions shot double the amount of free throws as the Wildcats, leaving Patterson optimistic that number will increase.

"I'm hopeful our free throw numbers will improve," Patterson said. "I think we can still be more aggressive getting to the foul line but I wouldn't trade the 3-point looks that we got."

The Wildcats have more than a week off before a two-game road trip against Tennessee State and Charlotte.

"I'm really excited about this road swing just to test us on the road," Patterson said. "I feel good with where we're at. I'm really looking forward to the challenge of playing in two cities against two very good opponents."

Patterson added how she wishes there wasn't an eight day break between games.

"I'd love to be able to throw another game in there," Patterson said. "No coach is going to say they don't appreciate the opportunity for practice."

BCS | Potential showdown between K-State, Oregon

very simple for the Wildcats. Win the final two games against Baylor and Texas, and K-State will be playing on Jan. 7 in Miami in the National Championship.

Trailing the Wildcats are undefeated Oregon and Notre Dame. The Ducks lead the Fighting Irish by .01, and should be able to hold off Notre Dame if they win out. According to Jerry Palm of CBS sports in an interview with ESPN, "These teams are in their order and the only way that order changes is if somebody gets beat."

If the Wildcats and Ducks win out it sets up a potential showdown between the two teams, something that was supposed to happen the past two seasons.

"It is just another step."

Collin Klein
senior quarterback

The Wildcats and Ducks were supposed to play a home-and-home series last year and this season, but those plans changed when Oregon agreed to play LSU and asked K-State to move it to the future. However, with the Big 12 Conference going to a nine-game schedule, the two schools agreed just to cancel the series.

All three teams have tough games to close out the season. K-State will most likely host a top-15 team in Texas, Oregon still has three games against top 25 teams and the Fighting Irish have to travel to Los Angeles to host USC.

While nothing is guaranteed in college football, as there seems to be upsets nearly every weekend, K-State is in the best possible situation. With the BCS system in play there are usually many different circumstances that have to happen for your team to go to the championship. That is not the case for the Wildcats; all they need to do is win. They control their own destiny and as senior quarterback Collin Klein always says, "it is just another step."

Two more wins, and the K-State fans will be looking forward to a nice little winter vacation in Miami.

entering the game was whether or not Heisman Trophy frontrunner Collin Klein would be ready to play, and how effective he might be.

"We were probably a little conservative for him [in our playcalling]," Snyder said.

After winning the opening coin toss, TCU deferred to the second half, and Klein trotted onto the field, where he completed his first pass for 8 yards on second down to move the chains for the Wildcats. On his next throw, Klein was intercepted for just the second time this season.

"Collin's grinding it out," said junior wide receiver Tra-maine Thompson, who said he wasn't concerned after the interception, which he credited as a great defensive play. "All week, he's been making plays in practice. He puts the team on his back."

K-State's defense made up for Klein's miscue, holding the Horned Frogs to a three and out on their first possession.

On the next play, Klein put to rest any lingering concerns about his health, hitting Chris Harper over the middle for a 62-yard gain. A few plays later, Klein punched in a score from 7 yards out for his 17th rushing touchdown of the season.

The Wildcats' defense was a force in the first half, forcing TCU to punt on five of their first seven possessions. The Horned Frogs' only chance in the half to put points on their next possession, but the offense couldn't get much going after that, punting on their next three drives. Even the board was a 45-yard field goal attempt by kicker Jaden Oberkrom that sailed wide right.

Anthony Cantele connected on a 41-yard field goal to give the Wildcats a 10-0 lead man quarterback Trevonne Boykin, who left the game briefly in the second quarter with an apparent injury to his throwing arm, was intercepted by junior safety Ty Zimmerman. Zimmerman's fifth pick of the year set Cantele up for a 48-yard field goal attempt that sliced wide right as the half expired.

After TCU was forced to punt on their first possession of the second half, Klein led the Cats on a 4-minute drive down the field, capped with a 34-yard touchdown run to take a 20-0 lead.

The Horned Frogs did not get on the board until a 27-yard field goal by Oberkrom with under seven minutes to go in the game. A 19-yard touchdown pass from Boykin to Brandon Carter with under a minute remaining made the score 23-10. Chris Harper recovered Oberkrom's onside kick attempt, and Klein took a knee to give the Wildcats their 10th win of the season.

K-State's defense was key in the victory, finishing with six sacks, including two by senior defensive end Meshak Williams.

"We don't really think about it, we just try to move on," said Thompson, who also said the team learned of Alabama's loss in the locker room after the game. "Everyone's a little tired, but everyone's gunning for us, we're not going to sneak up on anyone anymore."

Mexican American studies ban racist, ridiculous

Latinos are trying to overthrow the American government.

Or at least that's what Arizona's superintendent of public instruction John Huppenthal seems to think. Since the Tucson Mexican American Studies program was named unconstitutional and therefore illegal by House Bill 2281, the teaching of Mexican American Studies in public schools in Arizona has been forbidden.

This bill stands as an ugly reminder of a time when a human's life was weighted on their color, sex and religious beliefs. A time when lynching an innocent man was coupled with a good laugh, white robes and some moonshine while a burning cross crackled nearby.

This edict has the same basic idea men loyal to the British crown had when impaling colonists with rusty bayonets who merely sought their independence from crippling taxes. This is the contemporary equivalent of Hernan Cortes deciding he was having none of the Aztec's "heresy" and ordering all their texts to be burned over a pyre.

After so many struggles, why are we leaping back to a primitive trend that has been the cause of so much blood, sweat and tears?

The state argues that these books are banned because, among other allegedly negative factors, they promote the overthrow of the U.S. government. The sheer stupidity behind this argument is almost comical; I can't help but imagine a rabid horde of high school graduates each with a lifeless, zombie-like gaze, treading toward the White House in a lumbering mass seeking presidential blood.

At their strongest point, these books would only encourage Latinos to seek equality and justice under elements in this society which they perceive unfair. But isn't that human nature?

This argument serves only as a lousy excuse to sway both the ignorant and senseless, discounting the fact that encouraging ignorance has never been a viable solution to any problem.

People need to know who they are and where they came from because culture is what gives people their sense of belongingness and pride. Keeping a population ignorant is a tool that's older than the dust it's covered with.

This trick was done by a guy sporting an odd mustachio in Germany back in the day (hint: Adolf Hitler). While I do agree that comparing politicians to Hitler is a worn out cliché, I want to clarify that I am not saying that we have followers of the Nazi party in the government (that I know of). I'm emphasizing that this social trend has happened in the past; it's 21st century equivalent of book burning.

Shushed whispers often suggest that there is a hidden agenda; Arizona has a decent portion of its revenue coming from private penitentiaries. And some smarter and more educated individuals than myself suggest that keeping the Latino population ignorant encourages their dropout rates, which in turn elevates the demand for cell space as the number of inmates rises. However, suggesting such a thing would be scandalous and I'm sure it's merely a coincidence (wink).

Negative reactions to politics of Hurricane Sandy over the top

Among other damages, Hurricane Sandy showed us a glimpse of the ugly side of American politics.

New Jersey Governor Chris Christie made a few people angry by praising President Obama's handling of the Sandy crisis. Christie told Fox News that Obama's response was fantastic and praised his expediting of emergency relief efforts, then shamed his interviewers for asking about how it would affect the election.

Rush Limbaugh in particular seemed personally offended by the praise. He called Christie "a fool," his actions "unforgivable," and even accused Christie and Obama of New Jersey "man-love."

Why would it be unforgivable to praise someone for helping out in a disaster? Normally it wouldn't be unforgivable — who knows, it might even be desirable — but that someone was Barack Obama, which seems to imply that whatever he did to respond was the wrong thing to do.

I often think that a lot of conservatives have forgotten the logical sequence of "Obama's bad decisions make him a bad president" and reversed it: "Obama is a bad president, so his decisions are bad."

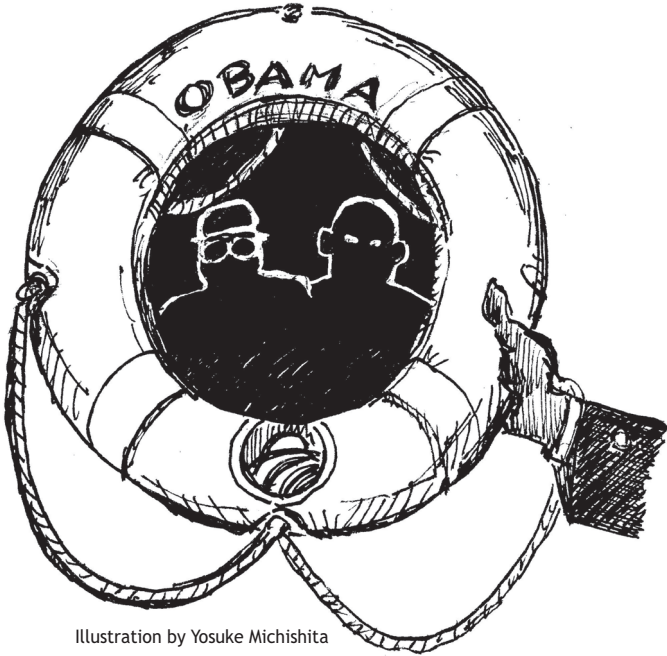

Still, the knee-jerk reaction has been directed at Christie's praise more than Obama's response, which I found curious at first. I think it makes some sense, though, to view it as some conservatives feeling betrayed.

Christie was a big campaigner for Romney, or at least against Obama. Back in May he called Obama "a guy who literally is walking around in a dark room trying to find the light switch of leadership." That quote is quite disjointed next to his more recent praise of Obama's effective leadership during Hurricane Sandy.

If it can be said that the conservative cause saw

Governor Christie as an ally and Obama as the enemy, this sort of fraternizing right before a close election could be seen as traitorous to the goal of electing a president who isn't Barack Obama.

The unfortunate implication here is that, in the minds of some, the goal of electing President not-Obama was apparently prioritized over the goal of helping hurricane victims. When two leaders put aside their differences and worked together in a time of need, others still saw a traitor working with the enemy.

Since President Obama's response was basically competent and the media didn't seem to give any limelight to rage-magnets, like pastors saying that Sandy was divine punishment for something or other, I didn't expect to see anything terribly unreasonable from the left.

Of course, I was disappointed by Michael Moore. On his blog, Moore wrote a mostly inane list of "thank-yous" to people who tipped public opinion toward President Obama, with one not-so-inane standout: "And you, Mother Nature, with all your horrific damage, death and destruction you caused last week, you became, ironically, the undoing of a Party that didn't believe in you or your climate changing powers."

It's not unreasonable to discuss how the election was affected by Sandy. It's not even unreasonable to ask if Sandy brought climate concerns to the political forefront. However, it is dreadfully stupid to thank a natural disaster for proving you right. Even if it was a problem of tone, the point stands that Moore saw an opportunity to say, "I was right," instead of, "Let's prevent more of this."

Obviously, I don't think that either Moore or Limbaugh are good representatives of their sides of the aisle, but just once I would like to see a major event spark an outpouring of constructive comments instead of bickering. Christie and Obama were able to stop talking about politics for five minutes and do something useful, and for that, both men deserve some credit.

CRIME | Increase in alcohol-related arrests, reports of forcible sex offenses

said. "Next he simply turns around and exits my room."

Her roommates called her asking what all the commotion was about, and soon after they all called the police. Jirovec said the police found the man later wandering the street. He was drunk and incoherent. Because of the rising crime rate, Jirovec said she would always be more aware of her surroundings.

"My roommates and I invested in an alarm system, and we always are sure to lock all of our doors," Jirovec said.

Capt. Don Stubbings, of the K-State Police Department, said one of the reasons these numbers seem to be rising is because there are several other reporting entities on campus, such as the Office of Student Life and the residence halls.

There were 49 liquor-related arrests on campus in 2009 and 101 arrests in 2011. Another possible reason that these statistics went up is because of the proactiveness of the campus police at events like football games, Stubbings said.

Many minor in possession tickets are a result of tailgating before a football game. Stubbings said during football season last year, he had a grant from the Kansas Department of Transportation to put more of his people to work enforcing drinking penalties. It was the focus of the entire agency.

"You're going to see those numbers go up when you have that proactiveness," Stubbings said.

The increase of liquor law arrests shows that the university is taking action, Stubbings said.

"It shows the effort that our university is making to take care of the safety of the students," Stubbings said. "Without a proactive effort, we would have more incidents that are alcohol related."

There was a slight increase in forcible sex offenses from 2009 to 2011. In 2009, there were three reported forcible sex offenses on campus and there were seven in 2011. Stubbings thought that this increase might be because more people have the confidence to come forward and report these crimes.

Stubbings said that there are many ways to stay safe. He said it is more than just getting a sober driver for the night.

"Take someone out there that's a 'sober partier,' if you will," Stubbings said. "Kind of like a wing-man or wing-girl that doesn't drink."

Stubbings said he has talked to many students who say they have a plan to stick together when they go out at night, but that does not seem to be the case when 2 a.m. comes around. Another important factor to staying safe, Stubbings said, is to be aware of how much a person is drinking.

"Not all drinks are created equal," Stubbings said.

It used to be that if students were caught drinking or doing drugs somewhere on campus, only the students who had consumed any illegal substances were reported.

Karen Low, assistant dean and assistant director of student life, said that rule changed in February 2011. Now it is required that all of the people at the location on campus are named and reported, one reason the numbers have gone up dramatically, Low said.

She said the numbers are also up because there's stricter enforcement in the residence halls and at football games.

Low said the pattern of drinking is very different now. People drink to black out now as opposed to just drinking socially, she said. There are greater risks to this new type of binge drinking.

"Lots of bad things happen to you medically," Low said. "You could be a victim of bad things."

Low was concerned about the number of forcible sex offense cases that involved alcohol. She guessed that of the cases in which she has been a part of the investigations, about half were alcohol-related.

Like Stubbings, Low questioned whether or not the rising number of forcible sex offenses reported means that there are more cases.

"The fact that we are getting more reports means that more people are reporting," Low said. "I really don't think that the number in the past three years has gone up as much as people's awareness of what constitutes a rape."

A lack of consent is the defining factor of rape under the law, Low said, and there is more education in the residence halls and elsewhere on campus about rape and sexual assault. Low thinks that this education is directly linked to the number of reported cases forcible sex offenses going up.

VETERANS | Parade was an 'outstanding job'

today and we are honoring our deceased and past veterans," Pepper said. "It started on the 11th day of the 11th hour of the 11th month so that's why we always have Veteran's Day on 11-11-11. Manhattan has always had a great Veteran's Day parade and I'd like to thank Lori Bishop and the Veterans Coalition for all their work they put together and did, it was an outstanding job."

Pepper said the main point of the parade is for the children of Manhattan to learn the significance of the day, especially the younger students in school.

Vietnam War veteran Mike Finchman said he was proud to wear his Uncle Sam costume to the parade. Not only does his experience as a soldier make it an important day, but his father, who was also a veteran, was born on the holiday.

Finchman said he has been dressing up for the kids for nearly 15 years at both the Veteran's Day and Fourth of July parades. He walked in the parade with the Lee Elementary school kids that morning.

"It's fun for me, but I also feel like the kids have a great time," Finchman said. "I'm just trying to entertain the kids, mainly. I was proud that I was a veteran and that I served in the United States military. If we didn't have people who would serve in the military and protect our freedom, we wouldn't be doing this probably. Let's never forget the importance of what our veterans do for this country. Don't forget the vets."

Laure Price's three children attend Theodore Roosevelt Elementary School, where she said it is very important for the teachers to impress upon the children the importance of veterans.

"I think they should learn it early, the concept, in social studies because it is part of our world government," Price said. "I'm just proud to be here. I'm proud to share this with them."

This was Price's third year bringing her family to the parade. She said it was an especially important year with it being right after the election. No matter who the president is, Price says, we need to support and pray for our leaders. She is very proud of how great of a job Manhattan does showing that support in the parade and the events throughout the day.

"We all agree on supporting the president and bringing the soldiers home safely to their families; they deserve that," Price said.

After the ceremony in the auditorium, everyone was invited to the lunch provided in City Hall.

At 6 p.m. at the American Legion Hall the day came to a close with a final celebration with the Veteran's Day Recognition Banquet.

BRIEFS | Explosion in Indiana destroys 81 homes

China to appoint new leaders

The Chinese Communist Party will reveal new ruling officials later this week, according to the BBC. With the world's second largest economy and a population of 1.3 billion, the party is expected to make a number of changes to their platform.

Their goal is continuing the economic success the nation has had since undertaking major reforms in 1978. For example, China's family planning policy, which limits parents to having a single child, has led to a wide gender gap that is expected to leave 24 million men without potential partners by 2020. The BBC reported that the policy could be amended or abolished, but current officials have not indicated that changes are in the works.

Blast levels homes in Indianapolis

An explosion in a neighborhood in Indianapolis late Saturday night killed two people, completely destroying two homes and leaving houses for blocks uninhabitable.

According to the AP, the cause of the blast is unknown, but damages are estimated at about $3.6 million. The AP reported that 81 homes were damaged and as many as 31 of those will need to be demolished. In addition to the two deaths, seven people were hospitalized, four with minor injuries.

Muslim Student Association hosts public lecture on women's rights in Islam

Sheryl Siddiqui, director for American outreach/community relations for the Islamic society of Tulsa, speaks on women's rights in the Islamic faith on Friday in the K-State Student Union's Big 12 Room. The lecture was sponsored by the Muslim Student Association.

Belema Iyo
contributing writer

On Friday, the Muslim Student Association hosted a lecture to educate individuals about women's rights in Islam. The talk was given by Sheryl Siddiqui, director for American outreach/community relations for the Islamic society of Tulsa.

"We have a public lecture every semester," said Mohamed Ismail, secretary of MSA and graduate student in mechanical engineering. "There is a lot of misunderstanding about the place of Muslim women in Islam. We hosted this because we want people to hear the truth, from us."

Siddiqui made the lecture, which was held in the Big 12 Room of the K-State Student Union, very interactive. She started off by defining some major Islamic phrases and words. She also talked a lot about the birthrights of Muslimas and their place in the Islamic society.

Siddiqui listed off some of these rights of Muslimas that people don't know. In Islam, females have the right to life and their own identity. They have the right to be educated and inherit from family. They also have the right to manage their own possessions and wealth; the woman works for herself. These women have a right to divorce, have a vote thats equal to a man's and females earn their own way to heaven.

graduate student in mechanical engineering

She adressed various misconceptions held by people of women in Islam, from the woman's place in marriage to what the Quran actually says about gender equality.

"Most people tend to mix up what culture and religion permits," Siddiqui said. "There are issues like female circumcision where one culture says something completely different from what Islam permits."

Siddiqui also talked about what protections Islam provides for women.

"I was very impressed with the speaker, because she is very experienced with the topic, especially as she is a social worker," said Caitlin Kelley, international student recruiter at K-State. "I love when campus hosts events like this because it opens up new voices and brings up multicultural questions."

Ranim Altamimi, sophomore in civil engineering, said that she thought the event was a great way to educate people on the issues concerning women of Islam.

"This was a very good way to meet people and be educated about these issues," Altamimi said.

Ismail was excited about the number of people that came to the event.

"It was a very suprising amount of people that came," Ismail said. "I'm glad MSA was able to help host this informative event."
